EDWARD RIDLEY & SONS,

Grand, Allen and Orchard Sts., N. Y.

The constant aim of life is to be happy, which if money could buy and millionaires were happy in proportion to their possessions, great wealth would amount to something, and little hope could then be entertained for their less fortunate neighbors; but, auspiciously, extremes are generally followed by remission and often by reaction, and neither does great poverty nor great riches listen to reason, but follow their own inclinations, which, like meteors, irregular and delusive in their direction, come to a disastrous and sudden end. Therefore a happy medium which begets prudence and listens to reason is assuredly more advantageous. Reason prescribes two ways to be happy: Either reduce your wants or augment your means. But if wise both will be done in such a way as to increase the general happiness of society.

Money is a dangerous master, but at the same time an excellent servant if one knows how to use it, and no greater opportunity presents itself for its employment than in matters of shopping, which admit of the greatest extravagance or the largest saving; hence we say, Examine the offerings of other houses, and comparing them with our own, note the difference.
